A Kentucky Duel.

Victor Duquesne, the famous pistol shot of New Orleans, while traveling in Kentucky stopped for the night at a tavern in Frankfort, says the New York World. In his days pistols, like Kentuckians going to take a drink, went in pairs. Every gentleman carried his twin derringers. After supper Duquesne went to the office counter, behind which the proprietor lounged, and putting down a half-dollar requested him to change it. The proprietor swept the coin into his money drawer in a mechanical way, and taking out two "bits," or twelve and a half cent pieces, shoved them towards Duquesne. The latter, seeing that the propri etor made no move towards giving him any more money, said :

"I gave you half a dollar; here are only two bits." "You gi' me a quarter, sir," responded the

"Do you mean to say I don't know a half-dollar when I see it? I say, sir, you gi' me a quarter and you've got your change for it."
Duquesne looked steadily at the travern-

Duquesne looked steadily at the travern-keeper for a moment. The guests seated around the fire-place became silent.

"You are a liar!" said Duquesne, in a low, even tone. Those terrible words meant something in Kentucky, and the speaker knew it. He feit nervously for his pistols. They were missing. He had left them in his room. The tavern-keeper's movements were as quick as if he had been charged were as quick as if he had been charged by an electric battery. He jerked open his LUMBER, SHINGLES, LATHS, NAILS, LIME, money drawer, took from it a pistol, cocked it and covered Duquesne, who stood motionless. "Would you shoot an unarmed man?" inquired the latter, calmly.

That appeal is never without its affect in the Old Commonwealth. "An unarmed man has no right to give an insult.'

"Will some gentleman lend me a pistol?" said Duquesne, without removing his eyes from his antagonist, whose two brothers had now ranged themselves by his side.

"Fair play, the world over," spoke up a NAILS, LIME, CEMENT, CALCINED PLASTER, &c., &c., &c.

The landlord's right arm dropped to his side, broken, and his weapon fell to the floor. Disputes a stood unbarmed and burly drover, putting a pistol in Duquesne's the floor. Duquesne stood unharmed and quietly exchanged his smoking pistol for one of the loaded ones in his pocket. One of the landlord's brothers, without a word, leveled a pistol at Duquesne, but before he could pull the trigger Duquesne fired and his new antagonist's right arm dropped to his side, broken.

"Any more?" inquired Duquense, preparing another firearm.
"Yes; confound you!" exclaimed the

> GEN. SCOTT'S MEDAL.-Senator Heaton Friday received a letter from a citizen of Hillsboro, Ohio, stating that he has in his possession a medal that was presented to Gen. Winfield Scott by the State of Virginia in 1848 as a memorial of her admiration for the great and distinguished services of her son whilst commander in chief of the Ameri-can armies in the war with Mexico in 1847. The medal is copper, weighs eleven ounces and is three and a half inches in diameter. The writer of the letter asks Senator Heaton to find out for him if there are any other medals of that kind.

WHENCE CAME IT .- Recently, Mr. A. B. Slye, of Benedict, shot and killed a swan. Upon examining the bird there was found, imbedded in its back, a piece of steel about two inches long, a quarter of an inch wide and shaped like an Indian arrow-point. The barb was serrated on both sides, the BALTIMORE. MD.
